PIKE PLACE MARKET UNVEILS WATERFRONT ENTRANCE DESIGNS
New Project Completes Market Historic District
Connects Downtown Seattle to Waterfront
Provides More Space for Farmers, Crafts, Retail, Low-Income Housing, Parking, Public Plaza and Views

SEATTLE – March 6, 2014 – In partnership with architecture firm The Miller Hull Partnership, the Pike Place Market Preservation and Development Authority (PDA) has released the latest architectural designs for the Pike Place Market Waterfront Entrance on Western Avenue.

For decades, the key piece needed to complete the 30-year vision for the Market Historic District of Pike Place Market has proven to be elusive. Within the next year, ground will be broken on the final piece of the historic district, celebrating the beginning of a transformation of the western edge of Pike Place Market and the future connection of downtown Seattle and the new central waterfront.

The low-rise, mixed-use development will provide parking for Pike Place Market and the central waterfront, added retail and restaurant space, several stories of low-income housing and expanded social services. The site will also provide additional public open space and expansive views of Puget Sound while connecting the Market to the Seattle Aquarium with easy pedestrian access.

“Throughout its 107 year history, the Market has continually evolved and responded to changing times while maintaining its historic character and authenticity,” said Ben Franz-Knight, Executive Director of the Pike Place Market Preservation and Development Authority. “The development of this project not only preserves the Market’s unique identity, but it also benefits Downtown Seattle by integrating destinations spanning the length of the Pike and Pine corridor from Capitol Hill to the Waterfront and connecting key transportation hubs including the cruise and ferry terminals and the Westlake transit center.”

Key features of the project include: 15,000 square feet of retail space; more than 30,000 square feet of open public space encompassing a public plaza and viewing deck from the Desimone Bridge; room for farm or craft stalls on the roof terrace; 40 low income housing units for seniors; 300 covered parking spaces; and multiple public art installations.

The removal of the Alaskan Way Viaduct and the development of the central waterfront are key factors in the opportunity to create the new Waterfront Entrance project on what is currently a .75-acre surface parking lot on Western Avenue. The site was originally home to the Municipal Market Building, constructed in the 1920s. In 1974 the Municipal building caught fire and was subsequently torn down. The space has remained vacant for nearly 40 years due to its challenging site location, which sits on top of the Burlington Northern Train tunnel, built in 1903 and still operational today.

Construction will begin within the next year and is slated to be completed by 2016. The Pike Place Market PDA is currently negotiating leasing agreements for the new tenants in the commercial space, which will feature an on-site brewery and restaurant with views of Elliott Bay, among other artisan producers.

Funding for the $65 million project comes from the PDA, the Washington Department of Transportation, City of Seattle and low income housing grants.

The Pike Place Market Foundation, created in 1982 to support a community of housing and services for low-income residents in addition to preservation and restoration of the Market, is leading a $9 million capital campaign with opportunities for the public to engage with and contribute to the project. A media-only Q and A session will be held at Pike Place Market at 3 p.m. on Thursday, March 6. Members of the media can talk in-depth with Pike Place Market PDA Executive Director Ben Franz-Knight and Market Foundation Executive Director Lillian Hochstein about the waterfront entrance project, the changing face of the Market as it will interface with the new waterfront and the timing and funding of the project. The latest architectural renderings will be on display.
